

I think that the FCC is wrong in further loosening media ownership restrictions by creating greater monopolies within the media than we, the American public, already needs. By lessening restrictions on media ownership, there will be further suppression of dissenting viewpoints and alternative media formats to create a comfort zone within our society. By ascribing to a singular viewpoint, instead of an individual deciding what she/he wants to hear or read about from their own personal media sources, that person will be dictated by one media source for their major connection of information gathering. This is not an example of fair and just broadcasting.
